The MONSTER BOOK of MONSTERS

From across the world, to your very back yard, monsters and creatures can be found.

In this comprehensive book, both Monster, Beast, and Creature are described.

While not every creature described is the ideal "Monster" all must remember that every creature,

when caged,

when muzzled,

when backed into a corner at wand-point,

when cursed to reveal it's powers,

or corked in a potion bottle to ferment,

can,

become,

Monstrous.

The Ashwinder is a serpent that is created from the remains of any magical fire that is allowed to burn out. The monster can burrow into the ground and lay their eggs, leaving an ash trail behind. Ashwinder eggs are red and give off intense heat. If they can be frozen with a freezing spell, they can be found anywhere. However, if they are not frozen, they will hatch within minutes. If careful care is taken, along with various fire spells the life span can be extended for prolonged periods due to their nature. It is likely that huge numbers of Ashwinders can produce up to 100,000 in a single event.

The monster square, but this is only in rare events. When the monster is perceived off the fire can occur for a short time.

It is the case with many of the world's volcanoes, which have been disguised by wizards for single protection.

The Basilisk is a giant serpent, also known as the King of Serpents. Although classified as an insect, it is a known winged killing machine, meaning it is a known insect killing machine. The Basilisk can grow up to fifty feet in length, and is a dark green colour with large eyes. It looks indirectly at the Basilisk's eyes, such as a reflection in a mirror, or a reflection in a pool of water. The Basilisk is a deadly creature, and its venom is powerful enough to kill a human in a matter of minutes. The sharp fangs of the Basilisk are full of deadly venom, powerful enough to kill a human in a matter of minutes, only Phoenix tears are the antidote. The venom can also damage inanimate objects so thoroughly that they are impossible to restore. The venom is potent even long after death. The skin of the Basilisk is armored like a dragon's and will deflect any spell cast on it. Like every snake the Basilisk sheds its skin in intervals. Their mortal weakness is the crowing of a rooster. They feed off all vertebrates and the male can be distinguished from the female by a scarlet plume on its head. They are born by hatching the eggs of chickens beneath loads thus creating

The Billywig is an insect native to Australia. It is rated DD, and is a round half an inch long with the color of a vivid sapphire blue. The speed of the Billywig means are attached to the top of its head, and the wings rotate extremely fast, spinning the Billywig so that it can fly. The Billywig also has a long, thin stinger at the bottom of its body. Anyone stung by a Billywig will suffer from extreme giddiness, followed by levitation, and this is what gives the Billywig its rating of DD. This is also why young Australian wizards and witches try to catch Billywigs and provoke them into stinging them. Too many stings however can result in a severe hovering uncontrollably for days on end. Sometimes, the victim will suffer from a severe allergic reaction and permanent floating may ensue.

Standing 7 feet tall, the Bugbear is the largest of goblinoid races. It is a lumbering brute that is taller... and heavier than most humans. Solitary creatures, they live and kill on their own. They are most often extremely dangerous and have a taste for human flesh. Living in temperate mountain regions they are perfect hunters and possess intense skills of perceptions and stealth. To be avoided at all costs due to murderous nature.

Bundimun

Bundimun is a magical creature found worldwide. It is a greenish fungus with many eyes, that can destroy a whole house. The secretions of the Bundimun rot building structure, and if a house gets a large enough infestation it can collapse. Scouring Charms can clear out small infestations, but large colonies should be dealt with by the Department for the Regulation and Control of Magical Creatures (Pest Sub-Division). Bundimuns are known to spit out acid that can seriously harm anyone who bothers it. Bundimun Secretions, when diluted, are used in some magical cleaning solutions.

Cerberus

They are very rare creatures. Perhaps under a population of 7 worldwides. It is unknown, like the Lurespoon, if each head serves a different purpose. Their great weakness comes in the inability to resist falling asleep to music. The mythic Cerberus described in Greek Myth was also easily put to sleep with music played on harps. This dog of the myths is the first recorded three-headed dog on record and is most likely the creation, perhaps accidental, of early Greek Alchemists. No while it is difficult to say how these creatures are born, with later lineages lost, it is clear breeding takes place. One unique quality of this beast is the respect it holds for not only the decesses of its own kind, but its fondness and respect for all creatures. Perhaps this is where the myths of the Guardian of the Underworld arise.

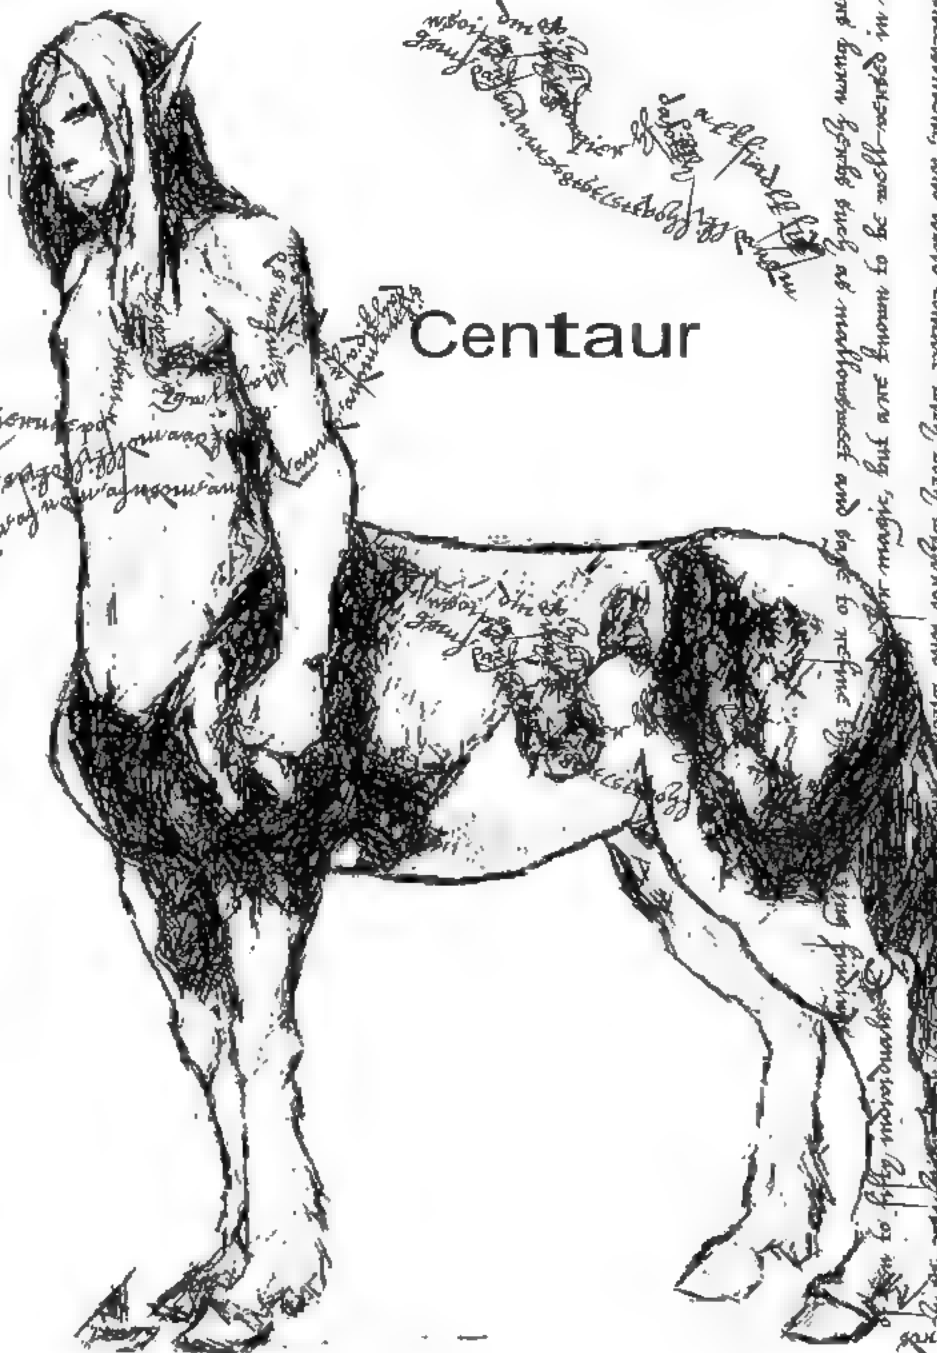

Known for being extremely loyal, intelligent and faithful

Chimaera

The beast from Greek mythology is possibly one of only a few creatures of many creatures all in one. It is not sure how these beings come to exist. However, it is known that many ancient people of magical abilities have perished when faced with a Chimaera. They have been known to perch on cliff edges, silently waiting and will stalk their prey until they have killed it. Doing its powerful jaws and whip-like tail can lash out with great power and has no obvious weaknesses. ## Dementor Dementors are evil spirits that feed on the happiness of their victims. They are invisible and have no form, but they can be seen as a dark, swirling mass of energy. They are often found in the Forbidden Forest, where they guard the entrance to the Chamber of Secrets.

Dementors are known for their ability to drain the happiness of their victims, leaving them in a state of despair and hopelessness. They are also capable of killing their victims by draining them of all life.

The only way to protect oneself from a Dementor is by using the Patronus Charm, which creates a protective barrier of light. The Patronus Charm is a powerful magic that can only be used by those who are truly happy and brave.

Dementors are a terrifying presence in the wizarding world, and their presence is always felt. They are a constant reminder of the darkness that lies within all of us.

Gnoph-Keh

They have been known to kill ~~them~~ <sup>people</sup>, piercing them with the horn, causing immediate death. Gnoph-Keh are humanoid cannibals described as being covered in coarse matted hair with a large protruding nose. They are violent disturbing creatures and should be avoided at all costs. They are violent, hairy, entities with an affinity for cold, ice and snow and are therefore found in mountain and northern regions. They are similar to a large, six-legged polar bear with a narwhal horn. The horn contains a poison that kills upon touch.

They make excellent pets if they like a witch or wizard. They have very high levels of intelligence, are independent, and occasionally aggressive.

They also have an uncanny ability to detect suspicious and distrustful people. They can also safely guide their owner home. Because of their aggression, they have an XXX classification when pure bred.

Seagles can interbreed with normal cats and generally have up to eight kittens in every litter. Their whistles can be used in wand cores although they are said to make inferior wands to those made with Unicorn hair, Phoenix feather Dragon heartstring.

Minotaur

The Minotaur is a monster, half-man, half-bull, that devoured sacrifices.

The beast has the body of a man and the head of a Bull. They are all but extinct with only one remaining animal in the known world. The one left has been deemed so dangerous that it has been captured and placed into a labyrinth in an undisclosed location by the Ministry of Magic and an unplotable charm placed on the maze. Ancient Greek and Roman wizards and witches would often tempt the beast, which often resulted in mutilation.

A Niffler is a treasure-hunting creature with a long narrow snout. They are very attracted to shiny things, which make them wonderful for locating anything metallic or shiny, but they might bite if a person is wearing any jewelry. Nifflers are gentle creatures, and can be affectionate to its owners but will also destroy belongings and property looking for things that sparkle. Nifflers live twenty feet below the ground in hives, and can produce five to eight young in a single litter.

Night Gaunt

Nightgaunts have a vaguely human shape, but are thin, black, and faceless.

Their skin is slick and rubbery.

They sport a pair of inward-facing horns on their heads, and have clawed hands and a long barbed tail which is used to "fiddle" their victims into submission.

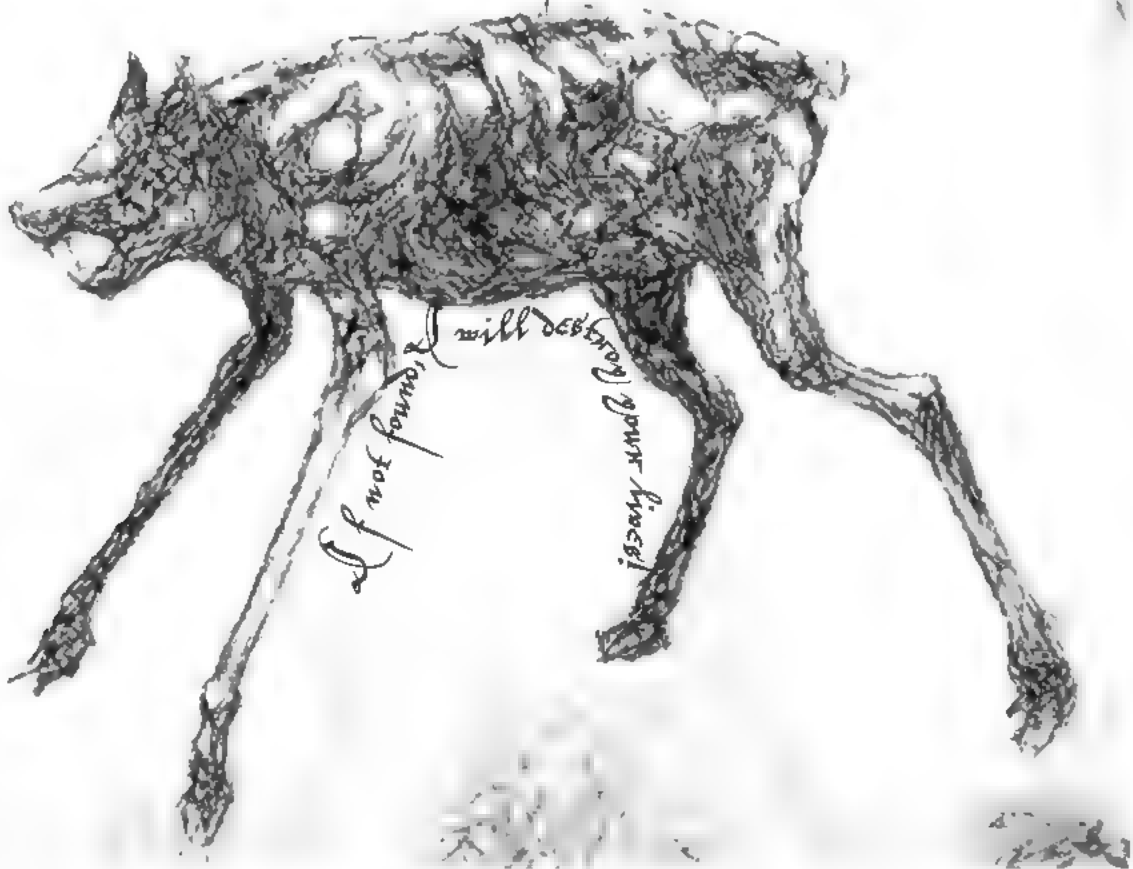

They can fly using a set of membranous wings. They make no sound.

Even laughter can truly kill.

Nogtail

The Nogtail is a demon-like creature resembling a piglet, but stunted by narrow black eyes, a thick stubby tail, and long legs. It is mainly found across rural areas in Europe, America and Russia. Nogtails sneak into a pigsty and suckle on an ordinary pig which curses the farm. The longer the Nogtail goes undetected, the longer the blight will stay on the farm. Fast and hard to catch, the only way to make sure the Nogtail will not come back is to chase it away with a pure white dog. Some people also hunt Nogtails for recreation.

The phoenix is a large swan-sized scarlet bird with red and gold plumage, along with a golden beak and talons, black eyes, and a tail as long as a peacock's. Its scarlet feathers glow faintly in darkness, while its golden tail feathers are hot to the touch. Phoenixes are known for nesting on mountain peaks.

They are gentle herbivores and are not known for fighting. As phoenixes approach their burning day, they resemble a half-plucked turkey. Also, their eyes become dull, their feathers start to fall out, and it begins to make gagging noises. Then the bird suddenly bursts into flames only to rise from the ashes shortly after. In a number of days, they grow back to full size, hence, phoenixes are immortal.

The most startling of the phoenix's abilities is its ability to regenerate itself. It periodically bursts into flames when its body becomes old, and rises from the ashes as a newborn chick. This event is called burning day, and gives these birds a great life span (if not forever), to the point of virtual immortality, as well as the ability to take the full force of a Selling Curse and still be reborn.

Phoenixes are capable of lifting a great weight with their tails, such as being able to effortlessly fly up a distance with four people holding on to its tail. They can also leave messages by bursting into flame to reappear elsewhere, leaving behind a single golden tail feather.

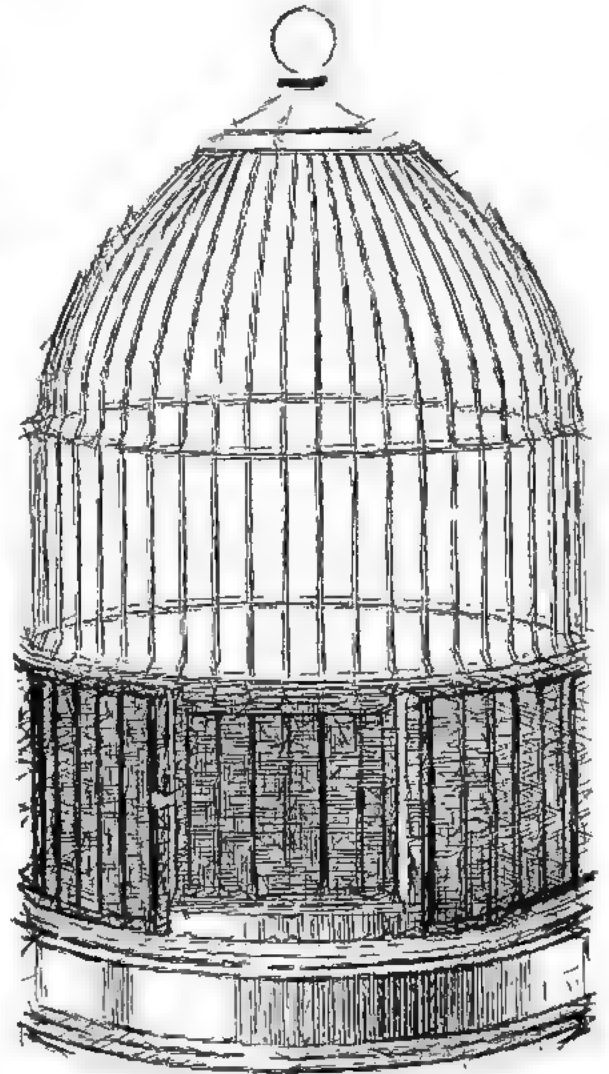

Phoenixes are immune to the gaze of a Basilisk which would normally kill anyone who has direct eye to eye contact, or petrify through indirect eye contact. It boasts magical tears and song. Their tears have potent healing capabilities. For instance, the tears are the only known antidote of Basilisk Venom. Their tears are also able to bring a person back even from the brink of death, while the Phoenix song will increase the courage of the good and strike fear into the hearts of the evil.

The Plimpy is a small round fish with two legs ending in webbed feet. It lives in deep lakes, and feeds on water snails. The Plimpy is not dangerous, but will nibble on the feet and clothing of unsuspecting swimmers. Often people consider the Plimpy to be a pest, and they deal with it by tying its legs into a knot and letting it drift away.

Pogrebin

The Pogrebin is a foot-tall Russian demon with a hairy body and an oversized grey head. The Pogrebin is attracted to Humans, and enjoys trailing them. When the Human turns around, the Pogrebin crouches down, and, because of its large head, resembles a rock. If the creature manages to tail a Human for a few hours, a sense of despair and futility will wash over the Human. When the victim sits or sinks to its knees to weep, the Pogrebin attacks and attempts to devour them. Fortunately, the Pogrebin can be fought off with simple herbs, Stunning Spells, or kicking.

Poltergeists can fly and delight in vandalism, malicious mischief, and the general aggravation and embarrassment of living persons. They can utter a discordant, wailing lament, write rude words on glass windows, throw water balloons at people, throw walking sticks at people, and either "come with the building" or else to enter it if it gives some wind.

Whilst similar, poltergeists differ from ghosts in a number of ways. Firstly ghosts are incorporeal, whereas the poltergeist is said enough to move objects with sufficient physical force. Poltergeists have never once been living humans either. The latter trait may indicate something about the condition of near-living and being unable to die.

Runespoor

The Runespoor has long been associated with Saint Moizands, and what is known of their habits is due in large part to the Parselmouths that have conversed with the creatures.

Each of the Runespoor's head serves a different function. The left head is the planner, it decides when the Runespoor is to go and what it is to do next.

The Ministry of Magic has had to make several forests Unplottable for the Runespoor's use.

The middle head is the dreamer (it is common for a Runespoor to remain stationary for days lost in glorious visions and imaginations) and the right head is the critic whose fangs are highly venomous. It evaluates the efforts of the left and middle heads with a continual irritable hissing. It is common to see the far right head missing, as the other two heads often band together to bite it off when it criticises the other two heads too much.

Because of this, the Runespoor rarely lives to a great age. The Runespoor bears its young in eggs that it produces through its mouth, and is the only magical beast known to do so. Runespoor eggs are very valuable in making potions to stimulate mental agility and have flourished on the black market for several centuries.

Sagari

An encounter with this spectre is believed to occasionally be an omen or cause of illness for anyone who comes across it. Appearing as a horse's head hanging from the branches of a nettle tree, its haunting whinnies are known to announce the presence of the Sagari. The Sagari hangs from this tree via a flap of skin attached to its head. It uses a decayed human arm. The Sagari is a spirit created when a horse dies beneath a tree and is not known to be dangerous to humans.

The Sandworm is a form of desert dwelling creature, also called Shai-Hulud, are cylindrical creatures with no significant appendages, equipped with a fearsome array of crystalline teeth, used primarily for rasping rocks and sand, and more than capable of eating anything imaginable. Sandworms grow to hundreds of meters in length, with specimens observed over 100 meters long. Sandworms live beneath the sand. Attracted to rhythmic vibrations on the surface, they would breach in pursuit of the origin of such vibrations. Due to the difficulty of studying these creatures, not much was originally known about the wild sandworms. The longevity of the sandworm was supposedly extreme, estimated in the thousands of years. Their skin is thick, rough, and orange colored. It served the simple function of armor and was comprised of many scales, each a few feet in size. These scales overlap and interlock to form the armor that protect it against internal sand invasion.
